NM EDGE AWARDS 63 CERTIFICATIONS, HONORS GRADUATES AT JUNE CEREMONY IN CLOVIS

August 28, 2025

CLOVIS, N.M. - NM EDGE, a program of the NMSU Cooperative Extension Service under the College of Agriculture, Consumer and Environmental Sciences (ACES), awarded 63 certifications to public-sector professionals across New Mexico between February and May 2025.

These certifications reflect the commitment of public employees throughout the State of New Mexico to strong leadership, public service, and making a difference in their communities. Participants earned certifications in various specialized areas designed to improve daily government operations, which benefit both their agencies and the citizens they serve.

To recognize the accomplishments of its graduates, NM EDGE held a graduation ceremony in Clovis in June 2025 where many were celebrated in person by program staff, peers, and family members. The ceremony provided an opportunity to showcase the dedication of public servants from across the state and build a sense of community among the public service professionals.

"We congratulate all our NM EDGE certifications earners on their commitment to professional development and lifelong learning," said Christy Green, NM EDGE program director. "The in-person graduation events are a wonderful way to connect and celebrate with our students and are something we look forward to every year." NM EDGE continues to support public employees- county, municipal, tribal and state- through accessible certification programs that build skills in public finance, ethics and leadership, human resources, and more.

These offerings align with the program's mission of Better Government Through Education.
